"If we want to build a strong economy in Massachusetts, then we must devote resources to school-to-work programs that educate and train students—giving them the necessary skills to be part of a productive and high-skilled workforce."

Governor William F. Weld

Summer 1996

This marks the third year for the Summer of Work and Learning. The program integrates summer youth jobs with classroom learning, helping students and teachers link academics with the world of careers. The goal is to better equip all students – college-bound and noncollege-bound – with the high skills and knowledge needed for success in today's complex society.

More than an isolated summer activity, Summer of Work and Learning is a launching ground for the larger year-round School to Work initiative across the Commonwealth, an integral part of the Education Reform Act.

Funding for the Summer of Work and Learning was provided through the Division of Employment and Training with appropriations made available through the 1996 Governor's Youth At-Risk Summer Jobs Program and the 1996 Governor's Summer Jobs Challenge Grant Initiative. Over 430 students, 50 teachers and 95 businesses from across the Commonwealth participated in these innovative projects.

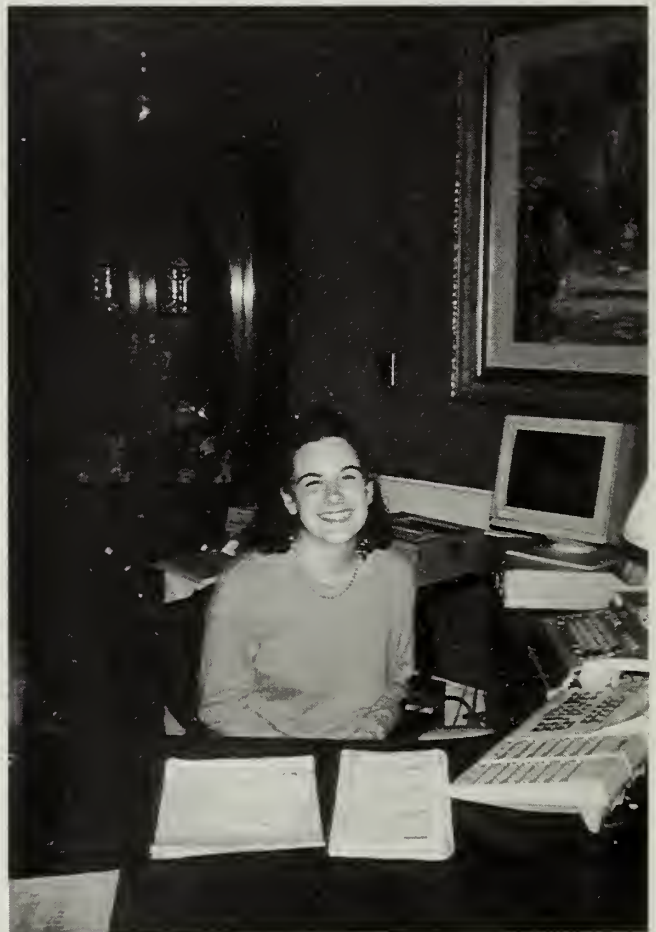

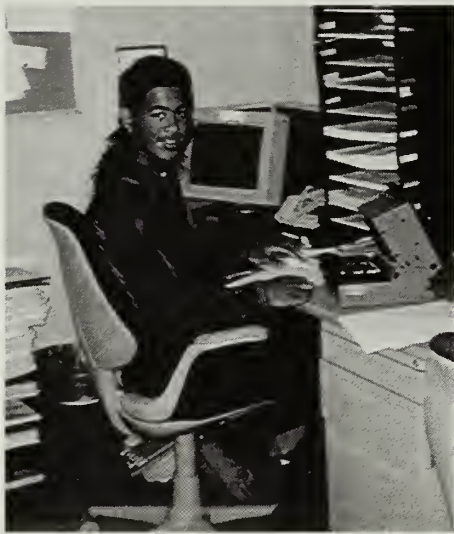

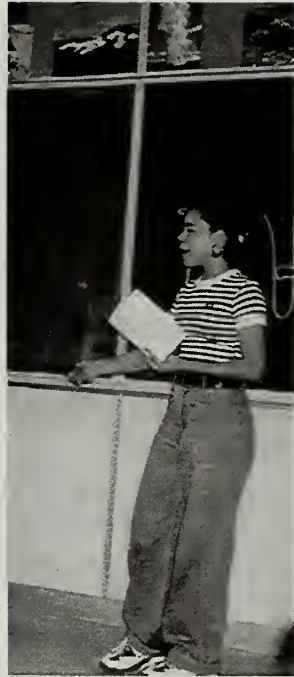

Acknowledgments

Today's celebration recognizes each participant's contribution toward the success of the 1996 Summer of Work and Learning.

Balloons were provided by The Big Party.

A special note of thanks goes to 1996 Summer of Work and Learning Co-Directors, Kathy Flynn, Massachusetts Office for School to Work Transition and Jason Albert, Division of Employment and Training. They made today's celebration possible.

Working and Learning. . .

Berkshire County

Three teams of students and teachers performed various projects in the travel and tourism industry. Activities included marketing, providing tours, assisting in museum stores, helping coordinate a summer music festival, including producing promotional brochures. Other students worked in a hotel in areas such as management, housekeeping, bell-hopping, maintenance, and planning functions. Students and teachers focused on problem-solving, team building, communicating, and learning employment skills. Each day students, teachers and employers reflected on the experience, planned activities and discussed future goals.

For further information contact Heather Putnam at 413-442-7177.

Boston

The 140 participating ProTech students worked together with eight Boston Public School teachers from the participating schools to build a strong partnership with 47 greater Boston employers. The work-based learning plans provided a structure for employers, teachers, and students to identify the skills necessary for students to succeed in the workplace. These skills will be integrated with classroom learning. Project accomplishments include a videotape describing the initiative, a Learning Plan, and a Teacher/Worksite Supervisor Manual.

For further information contact Keith Westrich at 617-423-3755.

Cambridge

Students in the year-round Health Internship Program worked in various departments of Cambridge Hospital, including Personnel, Interpreter Services, Pathology, Pediatrics, Radiology and Pharmacy. The students attended guided tours of each department and attended weekly seminars on all aspects of the health care industry. As a final project, students created a display of articles and photos capturing the range of staff at Cambridge Hospital to educate the staff and larger community about the hospital's "human capital". At a final gathering, students presented the project to the hospital's CEO, supervisors, and other staff.

For further information contact Susan Golden at 617-876-5214.

Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket

Students and a teacher produced a guide for young employees at the Cape Cod Five Cents Savings Bank, which will be used at other branches. Teachers will share their experience and information with other instructors for use during the academic year. To market these activities to other employees, the bank is funding the production of a video, which will be produced by a student.

In Barnstable Town Hall, students plotted conservation lands, traffic lights and street signs with state-of-the-art technology and completed several tasks for town departments. This technology is the basis for the Youth Mapping Project being undertaken by the Cape and Islands Local Partnership. Students will present to the Town Council the recreational needs of young people, and provide maps of land around the elementary schools for fourth-grade teachers to use with the class.

For further information contact Clare O'Conner at 508-362-2131 x4682

Chelsea

Chelsea High School students interested in the teaching profession worked directly with youngsters enrolled in one of Chelsea's summer nutrition programs. All students participated in the planning and implementation of Project PLAN, and three of last year's students returned to the project to serve as paraprofessionals in this year's program. The project targeted supervision, management and certification issues faced by educators teaching children in grades 5-12.

Worksite Summary

Students divided their time between course study, preparing lessons, presenting lessons, caring for younger children, and working with professional personnel as aides.

For further information contact Sean Moriarty at 617-889-8410.

Cranberry

(Covering 22 towns on the South Shore from Quincy to Plymouth)

After a week of training at PartyLite Gifts, students worked for five weeks in fast-paced high-tech departments in the company.

Students also worked at an internet development firm called Fishnet New Media, where they created a website called "The Information Super High School," which can be found at: <http://www.studentinfo.com>.

For further information contact Jane Milley, at 617-340-7142.

Greater Brockton

Teachers and students worked throughout Brockton Hospital, the Veteran's Administration Medical Center and Eastern Utilities. Using computer technology, students worked in the lab, radiology and the operating room departments and focused on such skills as communications, problem solving, decision-making, and team work.

For further information contact Bonnie Howard at 508-580-7445 or Maureen Murray at 508-588-9100 x1081.

Greater Worcester

Before the 152 students started working at one of 18 sites, teachers planned and developed a program with employees from the sites. Teachers and students were treated like employees, adhering to the work schedule, and given time at the end of each day for classroom activity. This included reflecting on the days' experiences, examining the skills used and needed for their jobs, and journal writing. When the program was complete, many companies hired the students for the remainder of the summer.

For further information contact Jack Doherty at 508-754-9425.

Springfield

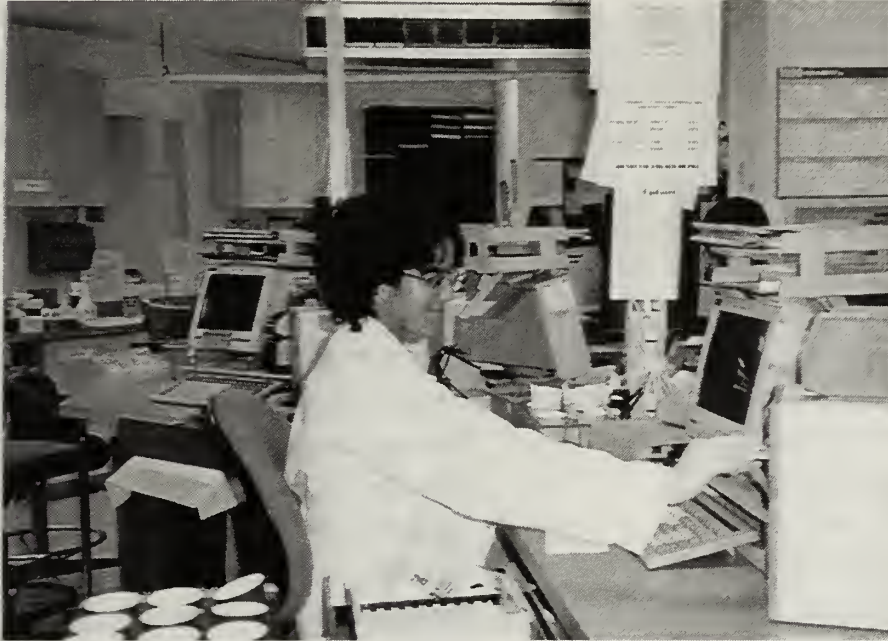

High school students worked closely with out-of-school youth, faculty, and ninth graders to develop a project about the world of work. Young people who had dropped-out of high school, many pregnant or parents, received daycare, health care, counseling, and other health and human services they needed to participate fully in jobs, academics and team-building activities.

Activities included academic instruction, goals-setting and an outdoor adventure experience. Teams of teachers from both the high schools and middle school participated in business externships and learned together with the students about the expectation, culture and responsibilities of the world of work.
